Colonel Thaddeus Kosciuszko drew the map for Major General Alexander McDougall, commander in the Hudson Highlands, in April 1779. Sketch shows Fort Arnold at the bend of the Hudson River, and Constitution Island to the right. The Great Chain floats on rafts of logs across the river. Fortifications, top down: Redoubt No. 4, Fort Putnam, Fort Webb, and three redoubts to the left. (Collection of the New-York Historical Society).

Monticello June 15. 17.

I have been much distressed, my dear friend & General at the embarrassments you have experienced from the want of punctuality in your remittances; but with equal satisfaction I have learnt from your letter to Mr Barnes that they were at length received. My inland situation, withdrawn far from all the commercial cities, has obliged me to leave to Mr Barnes altogether the receipt and remittance of your funds. too more honest or punctual man this care could not be committed. but it is impossible to be always guarded against bad bills. the merchants keep their affairs so secret to themselves that it is difficult to know always who are good; and if either drawer or drawee is in default, disappointment ensues. it was lucky he was able to recover the protested bill, so as to avoid its total loss. these considerations, joined to the great age of Mr Barnes, now 87, and my own age, now 74, make it worthy of consideration whether you might not be less exposed to delays, if your funds were now transferred to Europe. neither Mr Barnes nor myself have much more of life to expect. and should we receive the order of "March" nearly together, your affairs here would be without superintendence, while you could learn their situation, and send over new powers. your funds could be now sold without loss. the only danger is that of bad bills in remitting them, and whether you can find an equally safe and advantageous deposit there. the rotten and bankrupt state of the merchants of England renders that channel too unsafe. the surest would be Amsterdam, but bills on that place are sometimes difficult to be had, and interest there is very low. take all this, my dear friend into consideration, and that as you wish shall be executed with all the caution practicable. the good bill sent you in lieu of the protested one, and then the protested one additionally place Mr Barnes considerably in advance for you, and will occasion a longer interval before another remittance.
